

Steps to Effective Listening

What is Resonant Listening?

Resonant listening is taking 100% responsibility for accurately understanding the information that is shared with you and creating conditions for the speaker to speak freely and authentically.

Resonant Listening Skills:

1. Create a field of receptivity

- Set an intention to be curious
- Demonstrate openness with your body
- Stay present by not rehearsing a response
- If you receive feedback, allow yourself to take it in before responding

2. Practice whole-body listening

- Pay attention to verbal and non-verbal communication
- Listen for what's underneath
- Listen openly with as little judgment as possible

3. Listen for accuracy

- Ask for clarification
- Paraphrase what you heard

High-Quality Listening Prompts

- Tell me more.
- Then what happened?
- I wonder how you experienced that?
- What would you most like me to know about _____?
- What are you discovering about yourself?
- What are you appreciating about yourself?

craftedleadership.com

The Art of the Toss: Creating an Easy Balance Between Listening and Speaking

Here are tips for keeping the toss going:

When listening

- Listen without interrupting or rehearsing a response
- Use whole-body listening
- Listen for accuracy, ask clarifying questions
- Ask high-quality questions
 - Tell me more.
 - What interests you about that?
 - Sounds like you feel _____ (angry, sad, scared, happy).
Would you say more about how you're feeling?
 - What kind of support would you like?
 - What new learning is emerging for you?

When speaking

- Insert pauses and avoid "long tosses"
- Say something that invites a return toss
- Watch for signs that the other person is "with you"
- Use unarguable speaking

Based on work developed by hendricks.com